Program for the user

- Use known metaphors
- Reflect the users' mental model by using…
  - Familiarity and standards
  - Simplicity and streamlining (for users tasks)
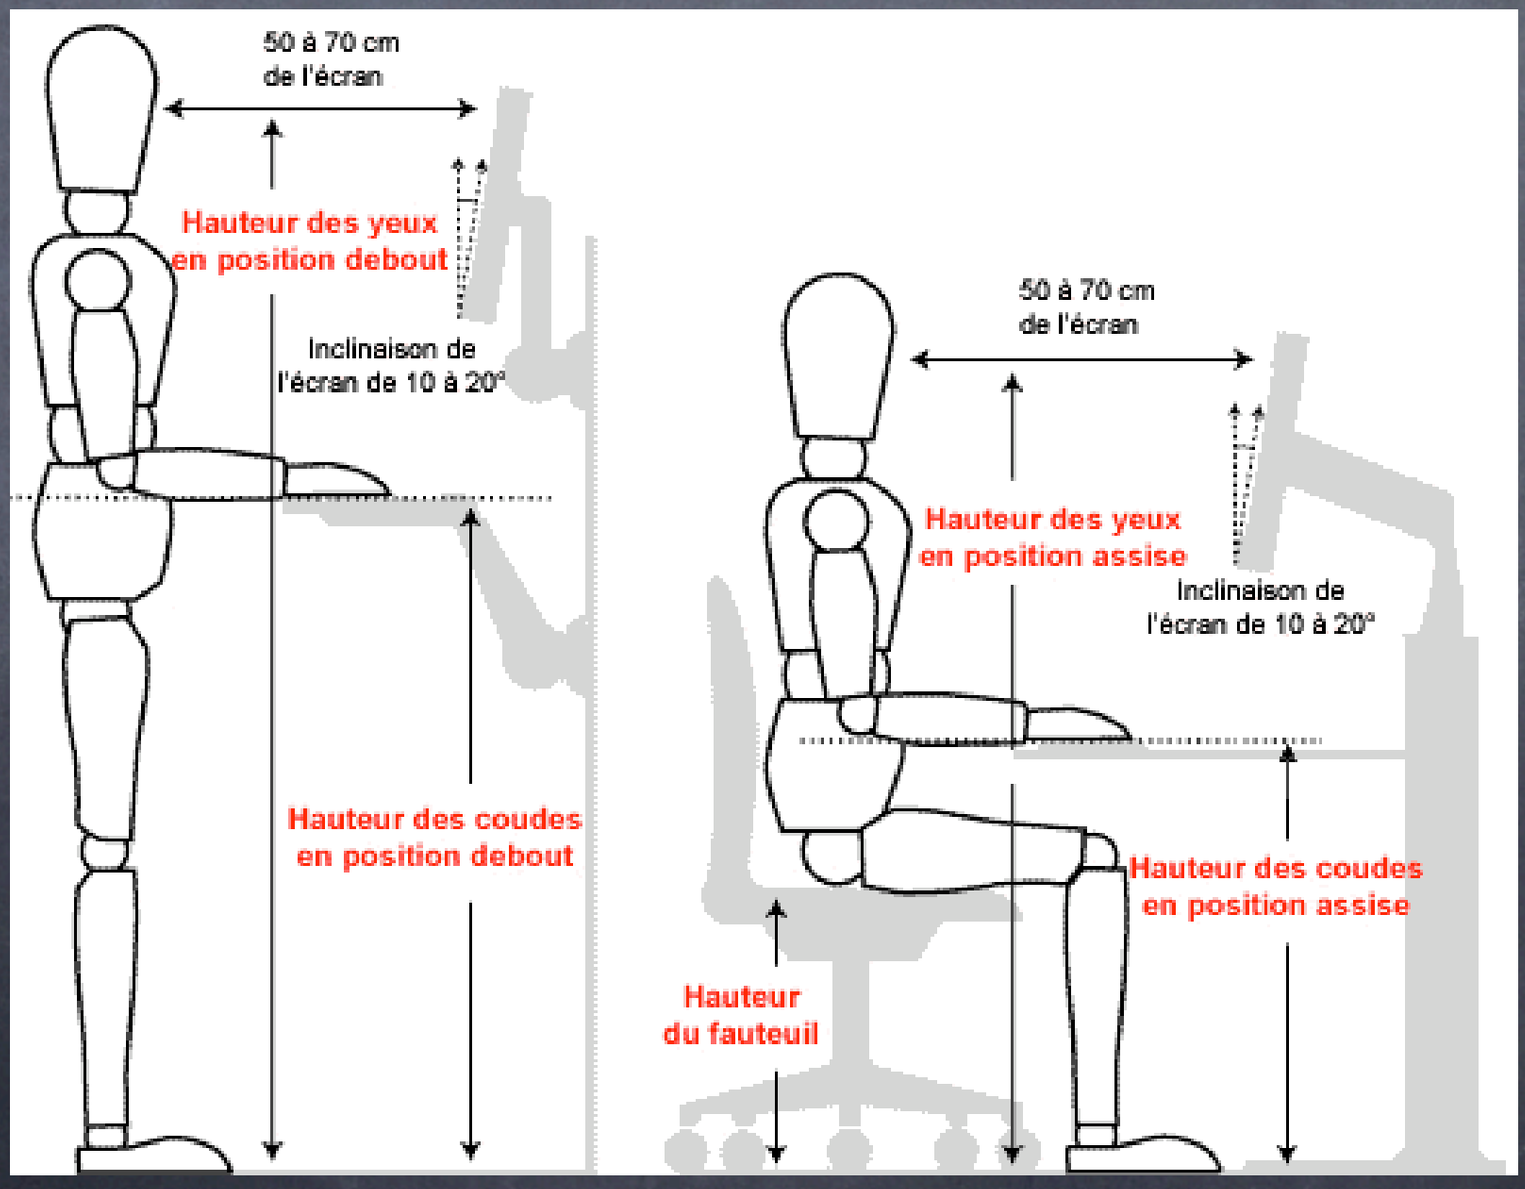
  - Availability in design and function
  - Discoverability
- Give control to the user (explicit and implied actions, direct manipulation)
  - Use explicit of clearly (visually) implied actions
  - Allow direct manipulation
  - Allow control actions to be taken by user
- Give informative, visual and straightforward feedback
- Design for the 80% of regular users, not the 20% of power users…

Ergonomics

ERGO = work

NOMOS = rules



Ergonomics

- Adapting physical spaces (or processes)
- Uses all resources of human sciences
- Uses models of work situations
- The user regulates the situation
- There must be balance between respecting the rules and getting a performance

Software is too frustrating.

There are a lot of choices in today's computing world – what's worse, most of them are too complicated. Hundreds of features, dozens of user preferences, unresponsive programs, inscrutable error messages, crowded toolbars, merciless disrespect for the safety of your data; all of these are problems that plague most of today's software.

But not all of it.

Yes, it's true. You may have seen some of it – glimmering rays

Enso

Having to change programs to perform simple tasks—for example, making a quick calculation, or looking up a definition—breaks your concentration, takes you away from the task at hand, and wastes your valuable time. Enso lets you do common computing tasks easier and faster than ever before. You get a huge productivity boost and a simpler digital life. And now that Enso is free, it won't cost you a penny.

Walt Mossberg of the Wall Street Journal explains:

Mar.5.2008 → I Am Legend's Original Ending

This changes the movie completely. What was a simple film about generic heroism becomes a story that humans — no matter how savage — still act human.

Mar.5.2008 → ExpanDrive

ExpanDrive is a OS X utility that mounts SFTP servers to the Finder. It's partly based on MacFUSE, which I'm sure some would argue does essentially the same thing for free. I haven't had the best experience with MacFUSE. Your milage may vary.

One of the issues with ExpanDrive right now is OS X's DS_Store files get scattered all over your server. It seems they're working on a solution, but until then, BlueHarvest is a great utility that will automatically remove DS_Store files from any non-local drive (including USB thumb-drives and the like).
